French

French majors study the language, culture and literature of France and other French-speaking countries. They develop linguistic skills and enrich themselves through the study of written and oral communication, literature, culture, civilization and business. Learning French will allow you to converse with and better understand people throughout the world, and work with international corporations. Along with English, French (official language of organizations such as the United Nations, UNESCO, NATO and the International Red Cross) is the world's most important diplomatic language.

Majors: French and Communication

Certificates: Business French and Public Relations

Distinctions: Communication Alumni Scholarship, Outstanding Graduating Senior in French Award

"I chose UC A&S because it allowed me to find a major that I was passionate about while exploring other areas of study. Through the University Honors Program, I was able to do a study tour in France. The experience allowed me to practice my language skills while applying what I had learned during the semester in a real-world setting. Upon graduation, I plan to pursue a job that allows me to use my French degree as a human resources or internal communication specialist. I feel ready for any challenge that lies ahead, thanks to the advisors and professors who were dedicated to my success. I couldn't imagine a more rewarding undergraduate experience."
