Philosophy

Philosophy deals with questions. Some courses deal with the history of thought, other courses deal with contemporary discussions. In addition, philosophy deals with a variety of questions that arise in the context of contemporary science and morality. Courses are often interdisciplinary in nature, drawing on such subjects as biology, psychology and medicine.

Three (3) Tracks Offered:

Biohumanities — encompasses the philosophical study of the biological, cognitive, and medical sciences and their social and ethical dimensions. Designed primarily for Pre-Med students, but any student may pursue it.

Cognitive Studies — prepares the student for graduate study in philosophy, and more generally for those professions in which it is central to employ clear thinking and a reasoned justification of opinion, and to integrate information from a diverse range of perspectives and traditions.

Law & Ethics — encompasses the philosophical study of ethics, politics, the law, epistemology, and logic. Designed primarily for Pre-Law students, but any student may pursue it.
